Prompt 1

To me, Saint Mother Teresa's words mean that real kindness should not be done because of something we want, but from our own selves. They tell us to help others without judging whether they deserve it or expecting a favor in return. When we give or help because of who we are, it shows people that they can trust us and that we can trust them. This prevents us from being selfish about who we want to respect. For example, if I am a nice guy, I should show that kindness to everyone equally, including strangers or people who might not thank me. It shows what we can gain from a nice deed and shows others our character. In a nutshell, this quote teaches me that our choices show others who we can be and how they can also be. By living this way, we can make the world a lot better.

Prompt 2

Because I want to be a helpful person, I will plan to dedicate my time to serving the people in all areas of my life. At home, I will help my family by doing extra chores, like washing the dishes or helping my sister with her homework. At school, I will try to welcome new students and make friends with more than a few people. I can volunteer to help clean up after Sunday services or participate in church food drives. In my local community, I want to join weekend neighborhood cleanups to keep our parks clean. I can support global charities by donating my old clothes to families in need. By doing this, I will show that I can be a person who will always support others.
